Many of the contestants tell me that they found more than one instance where a saying was attributed to several different authors, consequently they took the precaution of setting down severai authorities.

The painstaking effort put forth on these puzzles evidences the keen interest the puzzlers have in the progress of the "game." Almost every solution which comes to this desk nowadays bears some such imprint and to judge by this evidence I rather fancy the contestants are becoming a bit sharper along a good many lines, but indirectly erned with the solution.

One time they were content to jot down a few notes and send them along, trusting to good fortune to help them toward the prizes. All this has changed. A more careful, thoughtful, "calculating" set of puzzle solvers than I have on my list would be difficult to find.

They are a bit shrewd, too, in their judgment of the value of the puzzle

And, by the way, some inquiries have ne in as to where the puzzles come from. In answer I may say (I've said this many times, too, that the problems are forwarded by those interested in the department. I have had them come in from almost every State in the Union, so the field is not limited to the city or its environs, nor yet to readers of The

SEMI-PRINCESSE FOR YOUNG GIRL

Daily Fashion Talk. By FRANCES CARROLL.

THE smart little frock pictured today is just the thing to add to a young girl's war robe. The simplicity of the line and the trimming are specific attractions, though from my point of vide the elimination of at least some of the uttons would be a great improvement. However, this is a mere matter of ersonal cheice and there are those who dearly love the embellishment of "butons that button nothing." The smart hops nowadays are showing some faddy things in novelty goods which would work up admirably in such a pattern as

The secret of the great and continued vogue for silks of this variety is apparent, for whole chapters might be deoted to the adaptability of these silks and yet not exhaust the necessary points of the subject. The woman whose taste is above repreach and who appreciates the importance of always being smartly, as well as appropriately, arrayed, selects one of the many varieties of Tussah, which may be found so suitable for her traveling costume. For motoring or traveling these silks are admirable in the heavier weight. In the natural shades they never show dust, and for the morning shopping tour or smart luncheon frock nothing could be more satisfactory. There are numerous varieties of these sliks with more or less sheen and of light weight suitable for restaurant or bridge gowns, also exquisite evening gowns are de veloped in colors soft and alluring.
